

The Idiotlect Dicktionary

Michał Kamil Piotrowski
John Dunbar Kilburn

Introduction

Welcome. We noted there was a need for an introduction, once, before it was lost in the great war of meaning. We invite you to skip the introduction altogether, and while you're at it, erase the words, divide the sounds, chew and spit the vowels, consonants, recycle.

Welcome to the inside. If you'd rather stay outside, close the dictionary now.

Welcome to a soft language. It's minus eight degrees outside and the definitions are a blanket.

Welcome to the beginnings of your idiotic travel. Chew and spit.

Welcome to the idiotlect. We are silly and we suggest you stay stupid too.

Welcome to your friendly dictionary. There are currently twenty-one people reading it. How does it make you feel?

Welcome to a dictionary that has endnotes at the end like a proper, well-behaved book.

Welcome to a world of omission.

breath

- NOUN [bred]

A coffin is growing in my chest, the trees
are planning a zombie
apocalypse³.

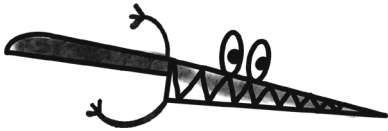

chess

- NOUN [trem]

Torsos are placed on the grid like a set of chess pieces. The king sent me a dick pic while the pawns were watching.

link

- VERB [wɪŋk]

Qwerty xylophones
produce a blend of bread and roses for the masses. Capitalism is here, winking. I'm liking posts from Jeremy Corbyn.

- ADJ [ɪm'pɒs.ə.bli]

Possible futures¹⁶ are all here, intoxicating, earthy, flavourful, jaded. People conclude themselves into handy blue boxes. Hence me, listening to fox cries and pop music.

rain

- NOUN ['kɪt.ən]

It's raining cats and dogs.
A kitten smiled at me
while falling onto the surface of the earth.¹⁸

sweater

- NOUN ['dʒʌm.pəʳ]

Sweaters lie in line like bodies to lend, while unicorns make pacts with rainbows to sell humans²¹ for soup.
